Hutchinson, 27, appeared in 47 games with Kalamazoo this season, recording a 28-14-0 record with a 2.56 goals against average and .919 save percentage. He ranked fourth in the American Hockey League and sixth among all AHL netminders with his 11 shutouts. Hutchinson has appeared in 185 NHL games with the Carolina Hurricanes over the past three seasons, posting a 78-43-9 record with a 2.64 goals against average, .910 save percentage and 14 shutouts. He was originally drafted by Carolina in the third round (74th overall) of the 2001 NHL Draft. In his career, Hutchinson ranks third in wins (79), seventh in shutouts (19) and second in goals against average (2.20). He won the 2006 Calder Trophy with Carolina as the AHL's Rookie of the Year and the league's Outstanding Goaltender for the 2005-06 season. In early October, former Panthers goalie Roberto Luongo signed as an unrestricted free agent with the Vancouver Canucks. And as Luongo looked to return to the Panthers, several other teams began to inquire about Hutchinson as a potential replacement in net. An important aspect of the Panthers' philosophy is having depth, and Hutchinson, with a year in the American League and a solid AHL playoff track record, represented a good fit.
